1983 is THE year for it is the year the Phillies celebrate their 100th Anniversary.

To help celebrate the year-long birthday, the 1983 edition of the Yearbook has been expanded to 76 pages. Our first Yearbook came off the presses in 1949. We've been producing one every year since then. Not many other major league clubs can claim the same. The cover is a montage of all Phillies yearbooks produced to date.

The rear portion of the Yearbook contains a big historical section. Allen Lewis of the Philadelphia Inquirer covers the Phillies history in four 25-year periods. The section concludes with a look at baseball in 2083 as written by Bill Conlin of the Philadelphia Daily News.

But, the 1983 Yearbook isn't strictly a look at the past. Color photographs complete with facts and figures on the 1983 team are contained in the front portion.

Over the last seven years, the Phillies have won more games than any other National League club. They've produced a club record eight straight winning seasons.

Paul Owens took over a last-place team in 1972. Through his planning, the club rose to the World Championship in 1980. "This year's club is the best offensive club I've put together. The 1977 one was my best one until this season," says Owens.

This year's club includes five Hall of Fame candidates in Pete Rose, Steve Carlton, Mike Schmidt, Joe Morgan and Tony Perez. Twice before in Phillies history, the club had five Hall of Famers in one season.

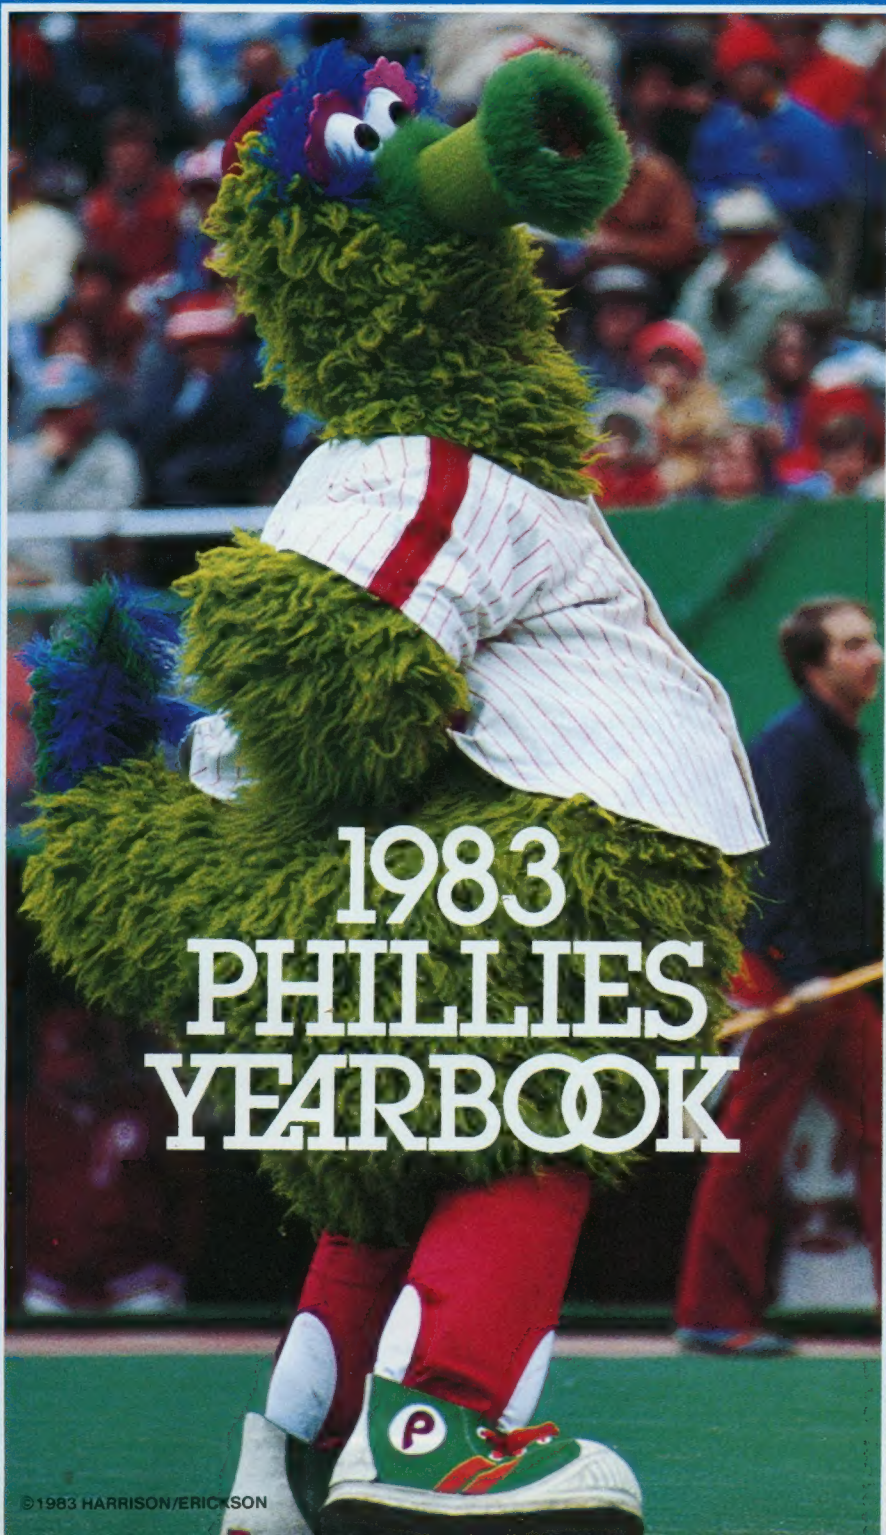

Back in 1892 there was Roger Connor (1b), Sam Thompson (of), Ed Delahanty (of), Billy Hamilton (of) and Tim Keefe (p). The 1917 club duplicated that feat: Dave Bancroft (ss), Johnny Evers (2b) and pitchers Grover Alexander, Eppa Rixey and Chief Bender.

The first 100 years and year 101 are all covered in this year's edition.

Pat Corrales

Pat Corrales is a man who looks you straight in the eye all the time and tells you what's on his mind. He's a decent, honest man and as he begins his second year as Phillies manager he's the first to say that 1982 was a learning experience for him. Even though some writers are slow to face facts, there is a huge difference in the style of baseball played in the National and American Leagues. Artificial turf, no designated hitter, more pitching depth and overall team speed of many clubs all contribute to make the job of a National League manager much more difficult than his counterpart in the other league. Corrales had six years in the American League as a coach and manager and he admits he had to learn a few things about his new league. "I think I did a good job with the Phillies last year," says the 42-year-old native Californian, and I know I'll do a better job this year." "I stand by some of the moves I made in September that turned out to be a little controversial," he added. "You know, he said, I went out and made a lot of appearances this past off-season and though I never liked speaking in front of groups in the past, I really enjoyed meeting the fans. They have a terrific feel for the game and really love baseball. I can't wait to get started this year and be a part of a winner in this town."

ThePhilliesCoaches

DAVE BRISTOL begins his second year as the Phillies third base coach. Former Phillies broadcaster Tim McCarver last season called Bristol, "the best third base coach I've ever seen because of his ability to recognize situations and react accordingly." A former major league manager with the Reds, Brewers, Braves and Giants, Dave also was third base coach for the Expos and Giants.

CLAUDE OSTEEN is one of baseball's most respected pitching instructors and like Bristol and Johnson, is in his second season. Claude is a tireless teacher and was well received by the Phillies pitching staff last year. Originally signed by the Cincinnati Reds, Claude was a 20-game winner twice in his career and pitched in two World Series with the Los Angeles Dodgers.

BOBBY WINE, now in his 12th year as a Phillies coach, is the dean of the staff and an important part of Pat Corrales' experienced crew. Wine is a student of the game having played under Gene Mauch for 12 years with the Phillies and Expos. Bobby is an expert at setting defenses and his overall knowledge of the game of baseball is rated excellent. His son Robbie is an All-American catcher at Oklahoma State University and should be a high major league draft choice in 1983.

DERON JOHNSON, the quiet man of the coaching staff, is the Phillies hitting instructor and he also is in his second year in that role. "D.J." has a laid back approach to hitting and always is ready to help a player who needs some assistance. Deron had a long playing career spanning 16 major league seasons which included a tour of duty with the Phillies.

MIKE RYAN is in his fourth year as the bullpen coach. A major league player with the Red Sox, Phillies and Pirates, Ryan's job is to have the relief corps ready whenever manager Pat Corrales puts out the emergency call. Nicknamed "Irish," Mike was a fine defensive catcher during his major league career and is an important member of the coaching staff because of his ability to instruct young players in the art of catching.

Phillies in the Community

The Phillies introduced a new community relations department late last year to help the team become more involved with the community.

The program, directed by Chris Wheeler and administered by Regina Hunt, has already instituted programs such as Visit the Vet which offers school children an opportunity to see Veterans Stadium from the inside—the field, clubhouse, offices and other facilities.

Other programs currently in operation include the circulation of a film entitled "A Little Help From Our Friends" which is designed to entertain and instruct young people on the game of baseball, visits to area schools by Phillies players, baseball clinics and the formation of a speakers bureau.

Through the new Community Relations Department, the Phillies hope to interact with the large number of charities and organizations throughout the Delaware Valley that need assistance.

Dear Mr. Wheeler:

Yesterday, the Hancock Elementary School had the great privilege of having Greg Gross visit us. It's difficult to find the proper words to describe the tremendous, positive impact that Greg had on the students in our school. The ages of our students range from five to eleven. Our students, at every age level, thoroughly enjoyed Greg's introductory remarks and his question and answer period, as well as the informative and entertaining film.

Greg has an outstanding personality and speaking manner for an elementary school. Moreover, he has an unusually fine understanding and sensitivity regarding different types of students, including special education students (learning disabled, socially and emotionally disturbed, etc.).

We were especially touched and greatly impressed by Greg's volunteering to visit every classroom to sign autographs. This took quite a while to do, but he performed this generous act in a most pleasant and amiable manner. It endeared him to our students and teachers alike.

You should feel very proud to have a person like Greg as a part of your public relations speaker's bureau. Our students and teachers will be fans of the Phillies and especially fans of Greg Gross for a long time to come.

Sincerely yours,

Nathan D. Bender

Hustle and Pride

Pete Rose is a remarkable man whose life has been devoted to baseball. Tom Seaver gave the best description of Pete when he said, "Pete Rose lives for baseball . . . sleeps it, eats it, thinks it every waking moment . . . baseball, baseball, baseball . . . just like when we were little boys."

Pete still plays with the enthusiasm and desire of a little boy, something rarely seen in a veteran player. But then again, Pete is no ordinary player.

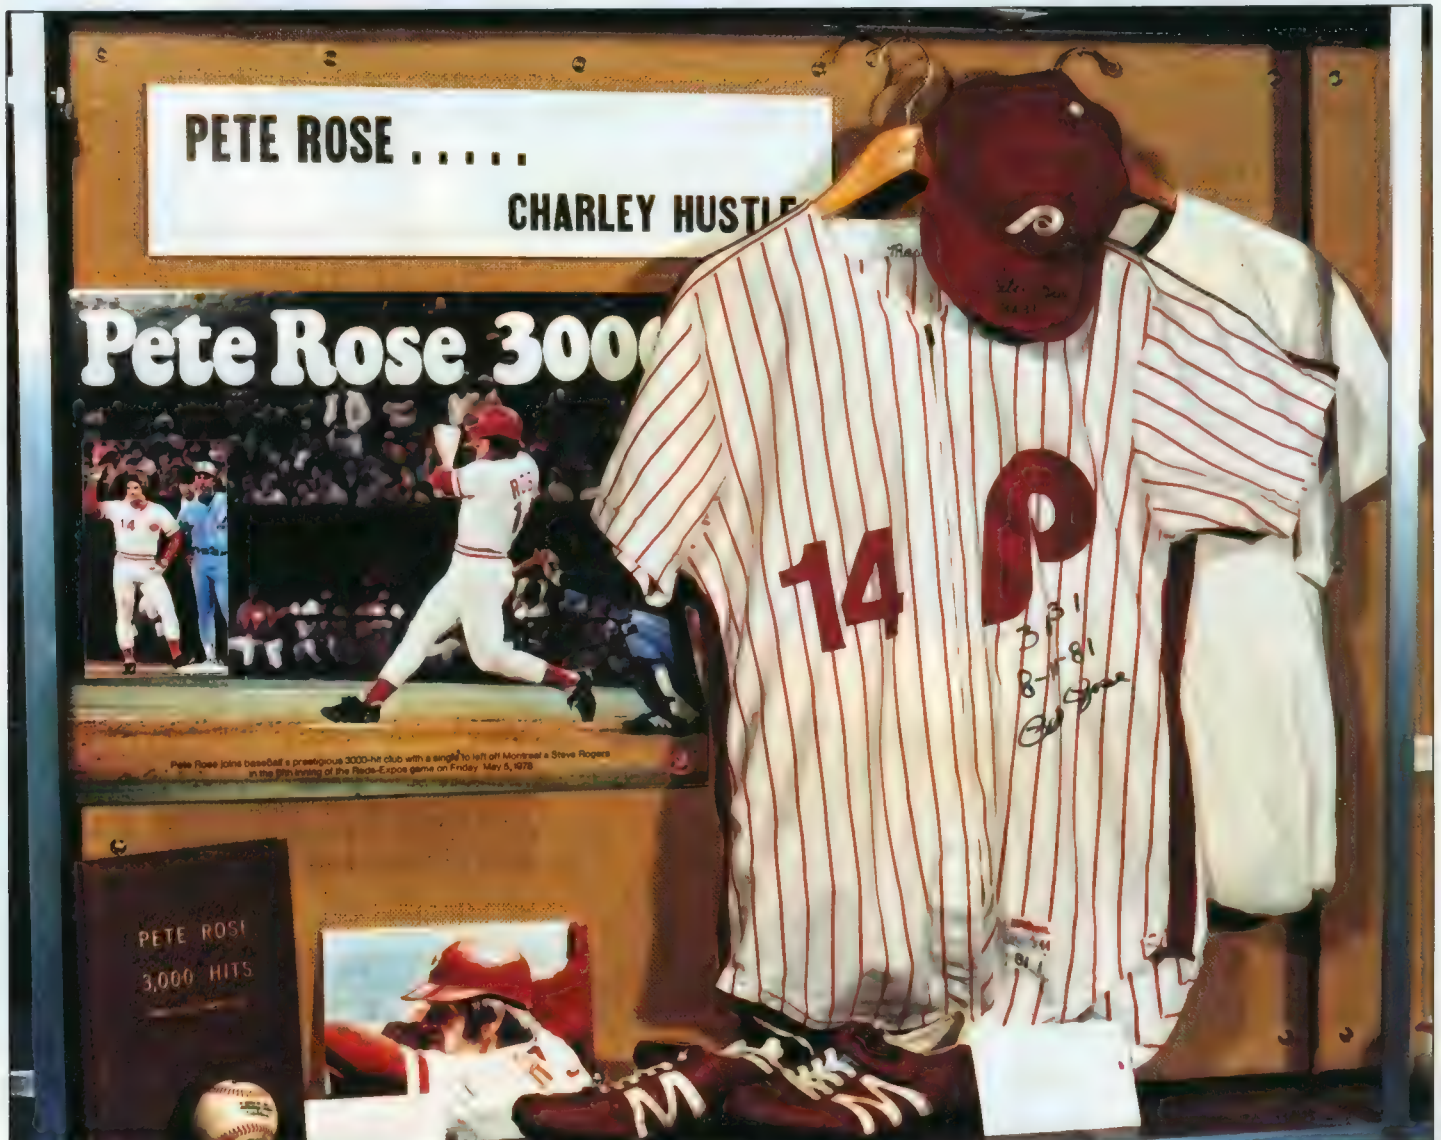

His amazing career began in 1963 and Pete broke into the majors with a splash capturing Rookie of the Year honors. Twenty years later, the 42-year-old legend has surpassed baseball's greatest hitters in the record books.

A list of Pete's accomplishments could fill the Philadelphia telephone directory. His 3,869 career hits are more than any player has ever recorded with the exception of Ty Cobb who amassed 4,191 hits during his career. Pete needs only 131 hits to reach 4,000 and 323 to pass Cobb's mark.

He owns three batting titles, an MVP Award and a World Series MVP Award and has recorded 200 or more hits in 10 seasons, a major league record.

Pete's trademark has been consistency. He has averaged 193 hits and 155 games played a year. He is probably the most durable player in the history of the game having missed only 80 games in his 20-year career, an incredible average of just four games missed each season.

As long as Pete is playing baseball, the record books will continue to be rewritten. Baseball fans everywhere will follow his drive toward the 4,000 hit mark this season and interest will climb in 1984 when he takes aim at Cobb's record.

Rose signed a new contract last year which carries a year-by-year agreement through the 1986 season, thus guaranteeing that he will be wearing a Phillies uniform when he breaks Cobb's record.

Phillies fans are especially fortunate as they will be able to tell their grandchildren that they witnessed the amazing feats of the man they call "Charlie Hustle."

Steve Carlton: Setting the Standards

"He's setting the standards they'll be chasing years from now." That prophetic tribute was issued by Jim Palmer, a three-time Cy Young Award winner, last winter after the Phillies' Steve Carlton became the first pitcher ever to garner four such honors.

Carlton faces a 1983 season in which he can set more standards:

- Victory No. 15 will put him right at the 300 mark, the 16th pitcher to reach that plateau.

- He has a chance to move into second place on the all-time strikeout list. He already has recorded more strikeouts than any lefthander and any National League hurler.

- He can tie Warren Spahn, the Hall of Famer, for most years, 100 or more strikeouts, season, in the league (17).

- Should the 38-year-old Carlton lead the league in strikeouts (he's done that four previous years), he would tie a major league record for being the oldest pitcher to accomplish that feat: Phil Niekro (Atlanta Braves), 262 in 1977 and Early Wynn (Chicago White Sox) 179 in 1958.

- Victory No. 21 would give Carlton 306 for his career. Only Spahn (363) would own more victories for a lefthander.

Can Carlton catch Spahn?

Carlton's age doesn't mean anything. His body and arm are super strong, thanks to a taxing training program he goes through with Gus Hoefling, the Phillies strength and flexibility instructor. His mental toughness on the mound is unmatched.

Should Carlton average 16 wins per year for five seasons, he would wind up with 365 wins, setting yet another standard.

There were 114 lefthanded pitchers in the major leagues a year ago.

Yet, only one has earned the respect to be called "Lefty"—Steven Norman Carlton.

Rival National League managers were polled: What's the first thing to come to your mind when you hear the name "Lefty"?:

"One of the most professional players I've ever been associated with,"

—Lee Elia, Cubs

"Future Hall of Famer,"

—Dick Williams, Padres

"An animal. One of the few to take it home after the seventh inning,"

—Joe Torre, Braves

"Anger . . . no seriously, a great, great competitor,"

—Frank Robinson, Giants

"Remarkable, unbelievable. What he's done for the pitching profession will be long remembered. His condition and performance for his age is truly amazing,"

—Tommy Lasorda, Dodgers

"A loss,"

—Russ Nixon, Reds

"Best pitcher in baseball,"

—Chuck Tanner, Pirates

"1964. Winnipeg. Steve was pitching for the Winnipeg Cardinals. I was scouting for the Kansas City A's. I knew then he was destined for greatness."

—Whitey Herzog, Cardinals

"Invincible. When you see him throw you really can't figure out how he loses. In my mind, he's probably one of the most consistent pitchers in the game of baseball. When you beat him you have to consider yourself fortunate."

—George Bamberger, Mets

"A Hall of Famer"

—Bill Virdon, Expos

"When you face him it means you have to play errorless and mistake free baseball to beat him. When he's on his game, he's as good as anyone who ever pitched. Once he gets the lead, especially in late innings, he's like a blood hound going for the kill."

—Bob Lillis, Astros

Let's Celebrate!

The Philadelphia Phillies are celebrating their 100th Anniversary this season.

Actually there was National League baseball in Philadelphia before 1883 but not for long. The Philadelphia Athletics, as they were called then, were charter members of the newly-created National League way back in 1876. However, the Athletics couldn't even finish that first season leaving Philadelphia without a National League club.

All of that was changed when Alfred J. Reach purchased the Brown Stockings from Worcester, Mass., and moved the club to Philadelphia for the 1883 campaign.

Only one other city in the current National League had a franchise back then, the Chicago White Stockings. The Cincinnati Red Stockings are credited with being the first professional team (1869) but they were not a part of the N.L. 100 years ago.

Reach chose the name "Phillies" a takeoff on "Philly". It is the oldest team name in the National League.

Rounding out the 1883 N.L., in addition to the Phillies and White Stockings, were the Providence Grays, Boston Beaneaters, Cleveland Spiders, Buffalo Bisons, New York Gothams and Detroit Wolverines.

The very first Phillies game was played on a Tuesday afternoon, May 1, 1883.

Providence won that game by scoring four runs in the eighth inning, 4-3.

While they were always called the Phillies, there were two instances when the name was in jeopardy.

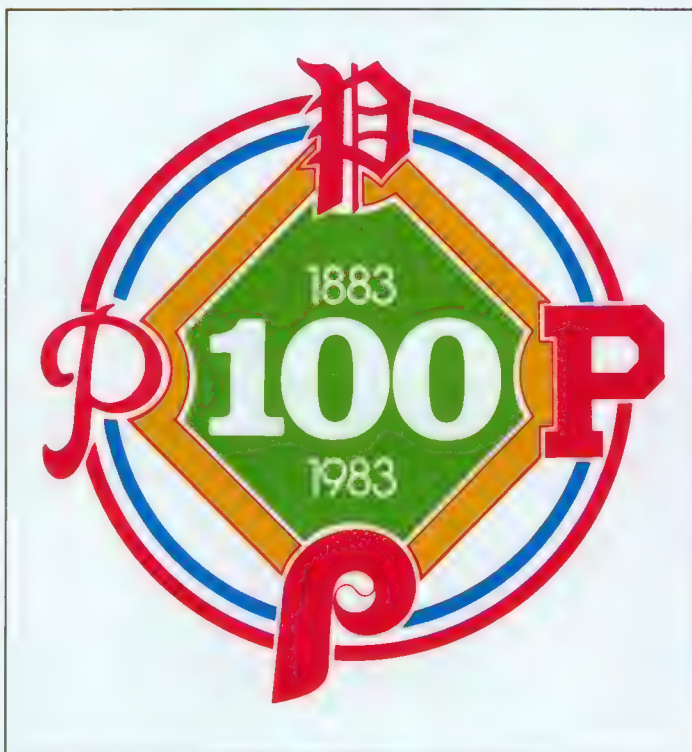

Back in 1910, club owner Horace Fogel started a personal campaign with the press to change the name of the Phillies. "The name Phillies is too trite and Quakers (as they were sometimes called) stands for peaceful people who will dodge a fight. We're not going to be that way. We're going to fight. Why don't you fellows call the club the 'Live Wires'," Fogel pleaded with the press. His efforts struck out.

Then late in 1943 after the Phillies were sold to R.R.M. (Bob) Carpenter, a contest was conducted to find a nickname for the Phillies. For 1944 and 1945, the club was also known as the Blue Jays although they were still registered in the league office as the Phillies.

When the present Phillies management first began making plans last summer to celebrate the anniversary this season, the first order of business was to conduct a contest among the fans to design a centennial logo which would be used throughout 1983.

A total of 1,304 entries were submitted.

Craig Drob, an architectural student at Temple University, designed the winning logo. He won two season tickets for 1983.

The logo depicts the four "P" insignias that have been used by the Phillies during their history.

The block "P" was one of the first ones, arriving in the early 1910s. Twenty years later, it was changed (top "P") with yet another change coming in the 1940s (left "P"). The Phillies changed their uniforms and logo in 1970 (bottom "P") in anticipation of moving into Veterans Stadium.

Baseball In 1883

One hundred years ago there was no television, no automobile, no airplane, no radio, no NFL, NBA or NHL and there were only 38 states. But baseball was alive and well as the Phillies played their first season.

The country has undergone many significant changes since the first Phillies season 100 years ago, but the game of baseball has remained basically the same. In fact, if Rip Van Winkle were to wake up in 1883, he would find the same basic game of baseball that he saw played a century ago.

Baseball is a traditionalist's game, having undergone few significant changes over the past century. The game is still played by nine men and nine innings still constitute a regulation game (prior to 1857 a game became official when one team scored 21 runs). The bases remain 90 feet apart and the weight and size of the baseball have not changed. A batter still only gets three strikes and each team still gets only three outs in an inning.

Although the game has not changed drastically over the past 100 years, there have been several alterations in the way the game is now played. Nowadays you can't imagine fielders not using gloves, but the first gloves introduced in the late 1800's were criticized by some. Boston's Harry Schafer claimed that baseball was being ruined by allowing players to use "mitts". "Those who cannot play without them should get out of the game and give way to those who can. There are plenty of players who can play splendid ball without using those monstrosities," said Schafer.

Here is a look at some of the more interesting rules and practices of baseball in 1883 which have changed over the years:

- A batter was not awarded first base if he was hit by a pitch.
- Batters were permitted to request a high or low pitch from the pitcher (this rule was abolished in 1886).
- The pitching distance was set at 50 feet (it became 60' 6" in 1893).
- There were only 11 or 12 players on a team.
- A pitcher had to throw seven balls in order to issue a walk and there was no balk rule (until 1898).
- The spitball was a legal pitch (it was outlawed in 1921).
- Gloves were made of thin leather and did not cover the fingers.
- Umpires were limited to one per game and were paid $5.00 per game.
- No games were allowed to be played on Sundays.
- Catchers often stood 20 or more feet behind the batter and caught the ball on a bounce.
- Players did not wear uniform numbers (numbers became standard in 1929).
- Teams only played a 98-game schedule.
- The pitcher's "mound" was a flat surface.
- There was no spring training (until 1886).
- Pitchers were required to deliver the ball underhanded. The present-day overhand delivery was permitted beginning in 1884.
- Rules prohibited the use of a new ball until the beginning of a new inning, no matter how worn or disfigured the ball might have been.
- Home plate was a 12 inch square (instead of the present-day five-sided figure 17 inches wide).

- Catchers did not wear chest protectors (until 1885) or shinguards (until 1907).
- Ballparks were made of wood and had no outfield fences. Fans were permitted to stand behind the outfield which was roped off.
- There were no visitors locker rooms and players had to dress at their hotels.
- Players had to pay $30 for their uniforms (clubs began paying for uniforms in 1912).
- Players salaries were limited to $2,000 annually.
- There were no dugouts, players sat on benches along the side.
- There were no coaches, player captains handled coaching duties.
- Batting helmets were not worn (until 1940).
- A pitcher got credit for a strike even when his pitch bounced before passing through the strike zone.
- Beer was not permitted to be sold at the ballpark.

1883... PROVIDENCE WINS

*The Philadelphias Lose
Their First Championship Game
(Reprinted from May 2, 1883, Philadelphia Inquirer).*

The first regular championship game between the Philadelphia and Providence Clubs was played at Recreation Park yesterday, about one thousand persons being present. The home club took the lead in the first inning by scoring two earned runs, to which they added another in the seventh. The visitors failed to score until the eighth inning, when by bunching their hits they scored four runs, three of which were earned. The fielding was good on both sides, but the batting was weak.

For the Philadelphias the honors were carried off by Ringo, Farrar, Harbridge and Purcell. The game opened with the Providence Club at bat. Hines, the first man to face Coleman, hit one to Harbridge, who fielded him out at first. Start hit to Coleman, and died at first. Farrell hit one along the left field foul line for a single. Irwin struck out. For the Philadelphias, Purcell hit one to left centre for a single. McClellan sent one over the right field fence for two bases. Manning hit to Farrell and retired at first, Purcell scoring. Ferguson hit to pitcher, and McClellan slid home. Lewis hit to Irwin, who threw to second, making a neat double play.

In the second inning neither side added to their score. After this inning the playing was generally sharp on both sides, neither club being able to get a man safely over the bases. In the seventh inning, the Philadelphias broke the ice. Lewis reached first on a fumble of Farrell and went to second on Harbridge's hit. Coleman retired at first, Lewis being doubled up at third. Ringo hit one up to left field, which Carroll misjudged, and Harbridge trotted home. Farrar closed the inning by popping a fly ball to Hines.

In the eighth inning the visitors opened up on Coleman in a lively manner.

Radbourne, the first man at bat, took his base on called balls. Denny and Gilligan hit for singles and Hines for two bases. Start retired at first and Farrell sent Hines home on a hit to center field. Farrell was caught between second and third and run out. Irwin closed the inning by hitting to Farrar. Four runs in, three earned.

In their half of this inning Purcell hit safely and in running to first sprained his ankle. His request to have some one run for him was refused by the captain of the Providence club, and the visitors were vigorously hissed. McClellan reached first on an error on Start, Purcell limping to second. Manning retired on a fly to Cassidy and Ferguson on a fly to Carroll. On a passed ball Purcell started for third, and fairly reached there, but was decided out at third, a very unjust decision, which was vigorously hissed.

In the ninth inning both sides were retired without scoring.

100 Years of Baseball: A Phillies History

By Allen Lewis, Philadelphia Inquirer Baseball writer

The 1887 Phillies, Harry Wright, manager

In the century that the Phillies have been members of the National League, the last decade has easily been their most successful. For too many years before that the Phillies were the doormats of the league.

In their first 93 years, the Phillies won pennants only in 1915 and in 1950. Finally, in the mid-1970s the club became a regular contender and in the seven seasons from 1976 through 1982 won four Eastern Division titles, a first-half crown in the strike-marred 1981 season, and their first World Championship in 1980.

The Phillies were not the first team from Philadelphia in the National League. In the league's maiden season of 1876, a team called the Athletics was a charter member, but they, along with the New York Mutuals, were expelled for refusing to make their final Western trip in that initial season.

It wasn't until the league decided in 1883 that Philadelphia and New York were cities too important to be left out that the Phillies came into being. Alfred J. Reach, a former second baseman who became a wealthy sporting goods manufacturer, and Jon I. Rogers, a lawyer and state political bigwig, were offered the Brown Stockings which had been located in Worcester, Mass. They jumped at the chance to buy the franchise, although they acquired no players in the deal.

After a miserable first season, the first of 23 last-place finishes, the Phillies hired Harry Wright as manager and the club's fortunes almost immediately improved under the man who had gained fame as pilot of the Boston and Providence clubs. In Wright's second year with the Phillies, the club finished third and remained in the first division from then through Wright's reign that ended after the 1893 season.

The closest the Phillies came to a pennant in that time was in 1887 when they finished 3½ games behind Detroit with a team that boasted three 20-game winning pitchers in Dan Casey, Charley Buffinton and Charley Ferguson, a great athlete who died suddenly the following spring.

In their first quarter-century, the Phillies were famous for their slugging prowess. In their lineup at the turn of the century were such notables as lefthanded-throwing catcher Jack Clements, and future Hall of Famers Billy Hamilton, Ed Delahanty and Sam Thompson, outfielders, and infielder Larry Lajoie, although the latter didn't stay very long.

When the American League came into existence in 1901, many National Leaguers were lured away by bigger salaries, and Lajoie was one who stayed in the new league after playing less than four seasons with the Phillies.

The Phillies finished second in 1901 under Bill Shettsline, who filled almost every job with the club from ticket-taker to president in his nearly half-century with the Phillies and who managed the team from 1898 through 1902. In the Phillies 25th year, Billy Murray piloted the team to a third-place finish in the first of his three seasons at the helm.

By that time there were several changes in ownership. Early in 1903, Reach and Rogers sold the club to a syndicate headed by socialite James Potter. After the next season, another reorganization resulted in Shettsline moving into the president's chair.

After three mediocre seasons, Murray was succeeded in 1910 by Red Dooin, who became the club's regular catcher in 1902 and was a playing-manager through 1914. A most significant acquisition was made in 1911 when pitcher Grover Cleveland Alexander arrived to join a team that included first baseman Fred Luderus, third baseman Hans Lobert, and an outfield that had Silent John Titus, Dod Paskert and Sherry Magee.

Alexander, who had been drafted from Syracuse, became an immediate sensation and went on to become one of the greatest pitchers of all time. The righthander won 28 games as a rookie and averaged 27 victories in his seven seasons with the team. He won 30 or more games in his final three years in Philadelphia, and still holds the major league all-time record for shutouts in one season with 16 in 1916.

In 1912, slugger Gavvy Cravath and catcher Bill Killefer became Phillies regulars and lefthanded pitcher Eppa Rixey, another who became a Hall of Famer, joined the mound staff. The 1913 Phillies finished second.

Federal League raids took some Phillies players the following season and the team fell to sixth, costing Dooin his job. He was succeeded as manager by Pat Moran, who guided the club to its first pennant in his first season.

That 1915 team had the league run and runs batted in champion in right fielder Cravath, the second best average hitter in Luderus, the best pitcher in Alexander (31 wins) and a 21-game winner in Erskine Mayer. It beat out the Boston Braves by seven games, but won only the opening game of the World Series against the Boston Red Sox. Alexander took that game, 3-1, but the next four games were won by the American Leaguers, all by a one-run margin.

The Phillies finished second the next two years, but the trade of Alexander before the 1918 season started the downfall of the club, and it finished in the second division every year from 1918 through 1931.

The departure of Alexander was engineered by Owner William F. Baker, who had taken over in 1913 and remained until his death after the 1930 season. Baker, a former New York City Police Commissioner, feared the loss of Alexander to the service and traded him for a wad of cash and two non-entities. That deal set a pattern that endured even beyond Baker's ownership, for the Phillies never had enough operating capital until the Carpenter era began in 1943.

From the time Alexander was traded through 1931, the Phillies finished as high as fifth only in 1929 in their second season under Burt Shotton (1928-1933). Moran, fired after the 1918 season, was followed by six different managers in the next nine years before Shotton's arrival.

Pitching was noticeably absent after Alexander left, but the Phillies produced plenty of outfielders who could hit. Cravath won six home run titles in seven years (1913 through 1919); Cy Williams won three (1920, 1923, 1927) with a high of 41 in 1923 that was a club record until Chuck Klein hit 43 in 1929.

In that 1929 season, Lefty O'Doul hit .398 to win the batting title. Only Hamilton (twice), Delahanty and Magee had won the crown previously. In 1932, first baseman Don Hurst batted in 143 runs to become the 10th Phil to win the RBI title. The 1930 Phillies team batting average was a lousy .315 but the club finished a bad last, 40 games from the top. The pitching staff's earned run average was 6.71, still the all-time major league high. The Phillies climbed to sixth in 1931 and to fourth in 1932 with their first over-.500 record since 1917, but their pitching was still the worst in the league.

By 1933, the Phillies were back in the second division and remained there for 16 straight years. Managers didn't last long and neither did the better players, for after Baker's death management was always in need of operating cash.

Gerald Nugent, who was club president from 1932 through the 1942 season, was always trading his good players for cash and lesser players. Just before his death, Baker traded O'Doul, while Nugent swapped Klein to the Chicago Cubs after the four-time home run king had won the triple crown in 1933. Other stars traded during Nugent's ownership included catcher Spud Davis, shortstop Dick Bartell, third baseman Pinky Whitney, first basemen Don Hurst and Dolf Camilli, and pitchers Curt Davis, Claude Passeau and Kirby Higbe.

The financial problems of the Phillies became so severe after the 1942 season that the league took over the franchise and sold it to a group headed by Bill Cox, a New Yorker who became the second Phillies president to be barred from baseball for life. In 1912, Horace Fogel, a former sports writer, was barred for charging that the umpires and the league president had conspired to make certain that the New York Giants would win the pennant. Cox, on the other hand, was barred for betting on games involving the Phillies.

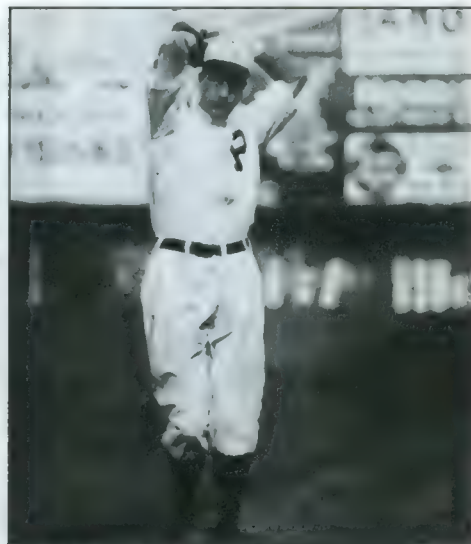

In November, 1943, Robert R.M. Carpenter bought the Phillies for $400,000 for his son, Robert Jr., who hired Herb Pennock away from the Boston Red Sox to be his general manager and provided him with the money to begin building a farm system.

Although Pennock died suddenly early in 1948 before the Phillies began to move up, the groundwork had been laid. The next year, with a young team that featured outfielders Richie Ashburn and Del Ennis, third baseman Willie Jones, shortstop Granny Hamner, catcher Andy Seminick, and pitchers Robin Roberts and Curt Simmons and relief ace Jim Konstanty, the Phillies finished third in their best showing in 32 years.

In 1950, the Phillies, dubbed the Whiz Kids, startled the baseball world by winning the pennant under scholarly Eddie Sawyer, who had been promoted from the farm system in the middle of the 1948 season. The 1950 race went down to the final game and was won in the 10th inning by Dick Sisler's home run at Brooklyn as Robin Roberts became the Phillies first 20-game winner since Alexander in 1917.

In the World Series, the Phillies continued their 1915 pattern of losing by one run. They lost the first three games to the New York Yankees by scores of 1-0, 2-1 in 10 innings and 3-2 before dropping the fourth, 5-2.

These Phillies were expected to repeat as pennant-winners in view of their youth, but they never did. A tie for third place in 1953 was their best showing, although they finished in the first division in four of the next five seasons. Bob Carpenter Jr. took over Pennock's general manager duties in 1948 and ran the club until he hired Roy Hamey as general manager in 1954. Sawyer was fired as manager in 1952, and was followed by Steve O'Neill, Terry Moore and Mayo Smith.

In 1957, the Phillies came up with a promising group of rookies and had their fans excited for a while. They were in first place in mid-July before fading to another second-division finish. Pitchers Jack Sanford and Dick Farrell were big contributors, the former winning 19 games and leading the league in strikeouts, and the latter developing into one of the game's top relievers. First baseman Ed Bouchee, outfielder Harry Anderson and shortstop Chico Fernandez, who was obtained in a trade with Brooklyn, were other newcomers who played well, as did Stan Lopata, who had become the regular catcher the year before when he hit 32 home runs.

1958-1982

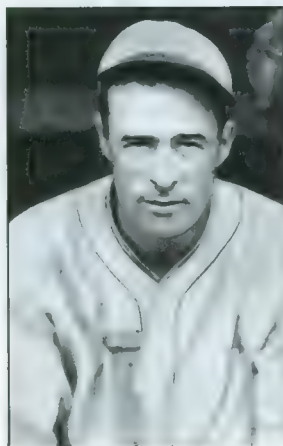

The Phillies started well again in 1958 but collapsed after mid-season, bringing Eddie Sawyer back in place of Mayo Smith as manager. But the club was headed down, and John Quinn, the able general manager of the Milwaukee Braves, was hired to run the club the next January. When Sawyer quit after the opening 1960 game, Quinn brought in Gene Mauch and he lasted until mid-June, 1968, longer than any manager of the Phillies since Harry Wright.

The decline went deeper before there was a turnaround. Starting in 1958, the Phillies finished last for four straight seasons, and set a modern major league record in 1961 by losing 23 games in a row. That was the bottom, and the club improved after that, aided by players like John Callison and Tony Gonzalez in the outfield, Tony Taylor, Ruben Amaro and Bobby Wine in the infield.

The 1962 Phillies finished seventh in what was now a 10-team league, but their over-500 record was their first in nine years. They moved up to fourth in 1963, and almost won the pennant in 1964 when a matured Chris Short and veteran Jim Bunning, obtained in a trade with Detroit, solidified the pitching staff that had Jack Baldschun and Ed Roebuck providing excellent bullpen work. Rookie Dick Allen provided the extra bat that was needed, collecting over 200 hits, hitting 29 home runs and filling a hole at third base.

That season ended in disaster, however, as the Phillies lost 10 games in a row after holding a 6½-game lead with just 12 games left. St. Louis won the flag by one game over the Phillies and Cincinnati, which tied for second.

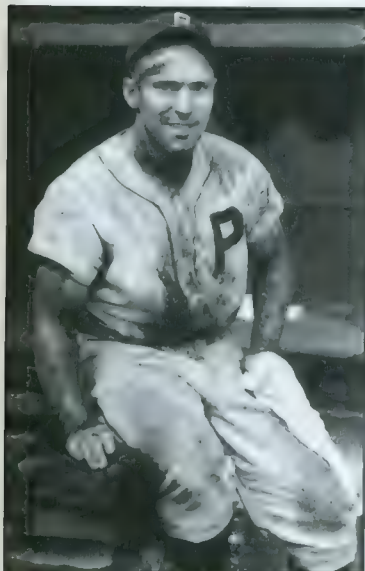

From 1964 through 1967, the Phillies were contenders but never came close to winning the pennant, and Mauch was let go.

Mauch was followed as manager by Bob Skinner, Frank Lucchesi and in 1973 by Danny Ozark, but it wasn't until 1974 that the club's fortunes brightened.

Two years before, in Quinn's last big trade, pitcher Steve Carlton came from St. Louis for pitcher Rick Wise and posted in his first season a brilliant 27-10 record that included 15 wins in a row for a team record. But that club won only 59 games, and the poor showing caused the replacement of Quinn with Paul Owens as general manager in mid-season. Five weeks later, he also took over Lucchesi's managerial duties for the rest of the season.

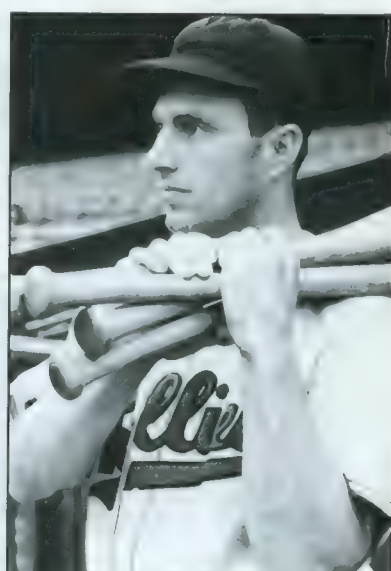

With Carlton, Jim Lonborg and Dick Ruthven heading the pitching staff, with shortstop Larry Bowa, third baseman Mike Schmidt, outfielder Greg Luzinski and catcher Bob Boone all rising from the farm system to become regulars, the Phillies climbed to third in 1974, and finished second a year later when Tug McGraw and Gene Garber firmed up the bullpen, Outfielder Danny Litwhiler who in 1942 played 151 games without an error sharing a league record.

Brown, the new first baseman, purchased from the Pirates, had not reported when this picture was snapped.

Tommy Underwood and Larry Christenson the starting staff and Garry Maddox was acquired for centerfield. Allen came back to finish his career the same year.

The first of three straight Eastern Division titles was won in 1976. Chief newcomers were return pitchers Ron Reed and Jim Kaat. First baseman Richie Hebner and second baseman Ted Sizemore came aboard in 1977 when Bake McBride arrived to strengthen the outfield, and the Phillies won again in 1978 with the same basic lineup but Ruthven back as a starter.

In the Championship Series, however, the Phillies fared poorly, losing in three straight games to Cincinnati in 1976 and to Los Angeles in four games in both 1977 and 1978.

Pete Rose signed as a free agent with the Phillies in 1979 and second baseman Manny Trillo came in a trade, but the club sagged to fourth place, and late in August farm director Dallas Green replaced Ozark as manager, setting the stage for the winning of the 1980 pennant and World Series. They beat out Montreal by one game for the division title, downed Houston in a thrilling five-game Championship Series, and defeated Kansas City in six games for the world championship as third baseman Mike Schmidt was named the most valuable player in both the regular season and the World Series.

The only lineup change in 1981 was in left field where Gary Matthews replaced Luzinski, but that strike-shortened season was not really a good one for the Phillies, who won the first-half division title but lost out to Montreal in the division playoff.

After that season, the Carpenter family sold the club to a group headed by Bill Giles, the executive vice-president who had joined the Phillies a dozen years previously. In the first season under this new ownership, the team finished second under new manager Pat Corrales. New regulars in 1982 included shortstop Ivan DeJesus and catcher Bo Diaz along with starter Mike Krukow, reliever Sid Monge and rookie Bob Dernier.

At the gate, the Phillies, who drew only 310,000 fans as late as 1945 and went over the million mark just three times (1946, 1950 and 1957) in their first 81 seasons, have drawn well over a million every year since the club moved to city-owned Veterans Stadium in 1971 and have passed two million six times in the last seven years.

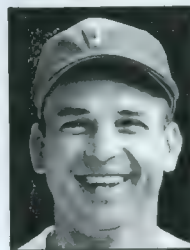

Stars like Rose, Schmidt and Carlton have played key roles in the recent success enjoyed by the Phillies and in their high attendance totals, too. Schmidt led the league in home runs five times in his first 10 full years with the Phillies and won two successive Most Valuable Player Awards, while Carlton was a 20-game winner five times and won a record four Cy Young Awards in his first 11 seasons with the club.

The Phillies' Four Homes

(The following are excerpts taken from THE PHILLIES ENCYCLOPEDIA by Frank Bilovsky and Rich Westcott; published by Leisure Press, May 1983)

During a period that has progressed from the horse and buggy to the space shuttle, the Phillies have gone from playing their home games on an odd-shaped lot in North Philadelphia to a multi-million dollar sports complex in South Philadelphia.

In 100 years, the Phillies have had four home fields: Recreation Park, Philadelphia Park-Baker Bowl, Shibe Park-Connie Mack Stadium and Veterans Stadium. Each had its own special set of characteristics and each was substantially better than the one before it.

RECREATION PARK

The park was an irregularly shaped plot that was bordered by Columbia and Ridge Avenues and 24th and 25th Streets.

Recreation Park was the scene of spring training for the Phillies in those days. Capacity in the small, wooden grandstand and bleacher areas was 1,200.

So packed was Recreation Park for each game, that President Al Reach began making plans for a new stadium in 1886.

The next year the Phillies deserted Recreation Park, after four years, moving farther uptown to a new stadium.

Recreation Park was left to local sandlotters. Eventually the site was covered with houses and forgotten. Today there is no evidence of its place in Phillies history. The irregular plot sits in the midst of a rundown section of the city, except for a few homes and a storefront church.

PHILADELPHIA PARK — BAKER BOWL

When it was built at a cost of $101,000, Baker Bowl was hailed as the finest baseball stadium in the nation, a magnificent showplace that was the pride of Philadelphia and the envy of other cities. When the Phillies moved out of the stadium after 51 years there, Baker Bowl was the laughing stock of baseball, damned and discredited, an obsolete relic that was derisively called a "cigar box".

The site was originally dump-like area that was bordered by Broad St., Lehigh Ave., 15th St. and Huntington Ave.

The outside of the stadium was brick. A pavilion seated 5000 and two grandstands in right and left fields accommodated another 7,500.

Sheds for 55 carriages were located beneath the stands. Reading Railroad tracks ran along Lehigh Ave. next to the park.

The club's offices and the Phillies clubhouse was located in the centerfield stands.

Philadelphia Park was a hitters' paradise. The distance down the left field line was 335 feet, 408 to center and only 274 to right. With a 30-foot high fence running across rightfield, pop flies were often converted to hits.

The park opened on April 20, 1887. The Phillies and New York Giants paraded up Broad Street in open carriages for the festive occasion.

A crowd estimated to be nearly 20,000 jammed the place. The crowd was so large that the outfield had to be roped off and standing room provided on the field.

The game itself gave the Phillies fans further reason to cheer. In the bottom of the first inning, the first nine Phillies at bat all hit safely and nine runs crossed the plate. The Phillies coasted to a 19-10 victory.

Shortly after William F. Baker became the Phillies president in 1913, Philadelphia Park changed its name to Baker Bowl.

It was the playground of Hall of Famers Grover Alexander, Chuck Klein, Ed Delahanty, Billy Hamilton and Sam Thompson.

The Phillies played their first World Series there. Gavvy Cravath and Kitty Bransfield each drove in eight runs in single games.

The second game of the Series was the first Series game attended by a United States President, Woodrow Wilson.

The Phillies won games of 24-0 and 29-4 and lost by 28-6 and 20-16.

The stadium was struck by three major disasters:

- Aug. 6, 1894. While the Phillies were holding a morning workout, fire broke out in the grandstand area. The players tried to put out the fire. It was hopeless as the flames spread throughout the wooden structure. Players had to fight their way to the street through smoke and flames. Nearby stables holding 350 horses caught fire, then several stores and homes.

It took several hours to extinguish the blaze. The damage was estimated at $250,000. Subsequent investigations never uncovered the cause.

Following the fire, the Phillies played briefly at the University of Pennsylvania at 37th and Spruce before returning to Philadelphia Park on Aug. 18 where temporary stands had been erected.

During the off-season, Reach had the stadium rebuilt using mostly steel and brick and featuring a cantilever pavilion, a radical new architectural technique in stadium construction. The rebuilt park also contained a swimming pool in the Phillies clubhouse.

- Aug. 8, 1903. A raucous between some drunks and young girls took place outside the stadium. Cries of "help" and "murder" attracted the fans in the left field bleachers. They ran to an over-hanging balcony to see what was happening. More and more fans followed.

Suddenly, the bleachers broke loose under all the weight and with a roar followed by screams, crashed heavily into the pavement below. The number of deaths reached 11. Injured, 232.

The Phillies were scheduled to move to Columbia Park, home of the Philadelphia Athletics of the American League. However, nine consecutive rain outs and then a road trip made the move unnecessary.

- May 14, 1927. The Phillies had just scored eight runs in the sixth against the World Champion St. Louis Cardinals when rain began falling. As the rains got heavier, the bleacher fans ran for cover in the lower deck side of first base. Again, the stands collapsed. Fifty were injured and one person died.

Once again, the club had to move. This time to Shibe Park for a dozen games.

The end of a long and storied residence in the old park came on June 30, 1938. The opponent was the Giants, the same team the Phillies faced when the park was opened 51 years earlier. The Phillies lost, 14-1.

Three times, parts of the stadium were destroyed by fire—in 1938, 1943 and 1950. Ownership of the stadium changed hands several times. Finally, the park was torn down in the early 1950s.

There is no hint today that the site had such a colorful history. A gas station-mini-market, a car wash and a fast-food establishment have taken the place of the stadium.

SHIBE PARK— CONNIE MACK STADIUM

The Phillies had been considering the move to Shibe Park for a long time. At one point, several years before their arrival, Connie Mack was so sure they were coming that he had an office and a clubhouse built for the Phillies. They sat empty for several years because the Phillies could not break their 99-year lease at Baker Bowl.

Closing Baker Bowl and then taking a road trip, the Phillies move to Shibe Park took place on a July 4, 1938, doubleheader against the Boston Bees. Boston won the first game, 10-5 but the Phillies came back behind Claude Passeau to win the nightcap, 10-2.

By the time the Phillies arrived permanently at Shibe Park, the stadium had been in use for 29 years by the Athletics.

Ground was broken for the stadium in 1908. It was completed in less than one year at a cost of $500,000.

The facade of the pavilion was a French Renaissance motif. The pavilion seated 8,000 spectators between first and third bases. Seating for an additional 12,000 was provided in two uncovered concrete bleachers that extended to the left and rightfield corners.

The park was opened by the A's on April 12, 1909.

The early dimensions were spacious—378 feet to the left, 340 to right and a huge 515 to center.

In its first decades the stadium underwent frequent changes. Bleachers were added in left field. Then in 1925, an upper deck was installed atop the bleacher sections that ran from third base to left field, first base to right field and left field to centerfield.

A mezzanine seating 2,500 was added in 1929. A year later, 3,500 more seats were added in the main grandstand. In those days, the rightfield wall was only 12 feet high. Residents on 20th St. could watch games from their upstairs windows and rooftops.

Most of the homes had rows of bleachers on their roofs and the residents not only sold seats for 25 cents to World Series and other big games, they even hawked hot dogs and drinks. The practice was eliminated in 1935 when a 50-foot corrugated metal wall was erected.

Lights were installed in 1939 despite protests from the area residents. It cost $115,000 to bring night baseball to Shibe Park, the first American League park to be so equipped.

The Phillies first home night game came on June 2, 1939, losing to Pittsburgh, 5-2.

Shibe Park was the first stadium to use a public address system and the first to post the lineups of both teams on the scoreboard. The Eagles played there, 1940-1958.

In 1946, the Phillies topped one million in attendance for the first time. Shibe Park's capacity at the time was 33,000. On May 11, 1947, 41,660 (40,952 paid) crammed every available space in the park to see the Phillies and Dodgers in a Sunday doubleheader. The Phillies won both before their largest Shibe Park crowd ever.

Capacity was increased to 33,223 in 1948 when Connie Mack added box seats in left and right fields and turned all sideline seats in the park so that they pointed toward home plate. He had hoped to remove the right field wall and build additional bleachers. A petition to the city was denied.

In 1950, Shibe Park had its' first Phillies pennant winner as the Whiz Kids won the National League pennant.

Games 1 and 2 of the World Series were played in Philadelphia, the Phillies losing both, 1-0 and 2-1.

Shibe Park's name was changed in 1953 to Connie Mack Stadium in honor of the venerable A's owner. A year later, the A's headed west to Kansas City and the Phillies were left as the sole baseball occupants.

Bob Carpenter, Phillies President, bought the park from the A's for $1,657,000. He sold the park 11 years later.

With the park in the Phillies possession, the centerfield distance was shortened in 1955 to 447 feet and again to 410 in 1968. A new scoreboard was installed in 1956 and the right field wall was lowered from 50 to 34 feet the same year.

On Oct. 1, 1970, the stadium played host to its' last of more than 6,000 baseball games.

The Phillies were pitted against the Montreal Expos in a game that would decide last place. 31,822 fans showed up.

From the sixth inning on, the steady sound of hammering could be heard in the stands as fans prospected for souvenirs. The game was delayed frequently by spectators running onto the field to scoop up dirt or into the dugouts to grab bats, balls, gloves or to shake hands with the players.

After the game, the Phillies planned to have a helicopter swoop down and lift away home plate, carting it off to its new home in south Philadelphia. But the chaos was so great that the plans were abandoned.

The contest was over in the bottom of the 10th inning when Oscar Gamble singled home Tim McCarver to give the Phillies a 2-1 victory.

A year after the team vacated the stadium much of it was destroyed by fire. Wolman, in financial trouble, sold the park to a developer and the remains of the building were demolished in 1976.

The lot is still unused at present. It is just a big, empty plot of land that once played a major role in the history of major league baseball.

VETERANS STADIUM

On the day that Veterans Stadium opened in 1971, a whole city breathed a collective sigh of relief. The opening of the stadium marked the conclusion of a long and often acrimonious struggle that dated back to the mid-1950s.

As early as 1953, Mayor Richardson Dilworth was anxious to have a new stadium erected in Philadelphia. Dilworth envisioned a stadium that he figured would cost about $11 million.

In the ensuing years, disagreements far outnumbered agreements. Location and various designs went round and round.

Finally, the present location was chosen, the design agreed upon and on Oct. 2, 1967, a ground-breaking ceremony was held at the Broad and Pattison Ave. site.

"Today," said Mayor James Tate "we, the city officials, are demonstrating that we are prudently spending the $38 million which has been allocated by the voters of Philadelphia to afford them the prestige of having the greatest sports stadium in the country."

Veterans Stadium was at long last finished in 1971. Built on a 74-acre site that was formerly marsh land, the park was made in the shape of an octorad, an architect's work that comes from the Latin words for eight and radius or eight points on a radius.

Seating capacity for the baseball field was originally 56,371.

The multi-colored, multi-purpose stadium, the largest in the National League, was completed at a final cost of about $52 million.

April 10, 1971, the largest baseball crowd at the time in the history of Pennsylvania—55,352—packed the stadium despite temperatures in the low 40s for first game. Jim Bunning was the starting pitcher for the Phillies and Montreal's Boots Day sent a grounder back to the mound on the very first pitch. Bunning threw to first baseman Deron Johnson to record the stadium's first out.

The Phillies went on to win, 4-1. Larry Bowa got the park's first hit, a triple.

The stadium turned out to be a good omen for the Phillies as they entered the most successful period of time in their history. Three straight division titles were won starting in 1976. Pete Rose and Manny Trillo joined the club and big expectations were in order for 1979. But, the club fell to fourth.

With Dallas Green at the helm, the Phillies made 1980 their greatest year in the 98-year history of the club.

When Tug McGraw struck out Kansas City's Willie Wilson to end the World Series, it was as though all the ghosts of the Phillies past had finally been exorcised.

Veterans Stadium—home of the World Champion Phillies. Unfortunately it was a tag which had eluded the other Phillies homes.

The Oldest Living Phillies

by Vince Nizans

An off-season search for the oldest living Phillies player drew jokes from individuals who suggested that the Phillies should look no further than this year's roster. Others poked fun at Richie Ashburn, claiming that "Whitey" held that distinction.

Several men in their 70's and 80's contacted the Phillies thinking that they were the oldest living former Phillie. However those "youngsters" weren't even close as the Phils discovered 93-year-old John Enzmann, a pitcher for the 1920 club.

Enzmann pitched in 16 games for the Phillies, earning a record of 2-3 with a 3.84 earned run average. That marked the conclusion of a four-year career in the major leagues in which he compiled a 10-12 record and a 2.84 ERA.

A native of Brooklyn, N.Y., Enzmann retired in 1972 after working 65 years with a tool and die company in Brooklyn and moved to Ft. Lauderdale, Fla. with his wife Alice.

Failing eyesight and hearing haven't slowed Enzmann down much. He keeps active by bowling twice a week and holds a 133 average. During the summer months he attends several minor league games in the Florida State League and enjoys watching the Major League Game Of The Week on television.

Enzmann is touched by the letters he still receives weekly from fans. "I was never an outstanding player, but people still think enough to write to me," he said.

Enzmann played with three Hall of Famers on the 1920 Phillies team—Dave Bancroft, Eppa Rixey and Casey Stengel. "Sometimes Stengel and I would room together on the road," Enzmann said. "He was a wonderful entertainer and a swell guy and a pretty good ballplayer too."

Some of the greatest players in baseball history played in Enzmann's era including Babe Ruth, Ty Cobb and Walter Johnson. "Babe Ruth hit a home run off me when I was with Cleveland. He was a great hitter," Enzmann recalled.

Asked about the changes in the game since the time he played Enzmann remarked, "Obviously the salaries are much greater now. The most money I ever earned in one season was $3,500. And the conditions are much better now. For one thing it seems that there is always a new ball in play. In my time, when a new ball was put in play the first baseman would spit tobacco juice on it and rub it in the dirt. When the pitcher got the ball back it would look like the eight ball."

Enzmann watches the Phillies on television and is a great admirer of Pete Rose and Steve Carlton. "Rose hustles more than any player I've ever seen," Enzmann noted. "I think he is as popular as Babe Ruth was. And Steve Carlton is an outstanding pitcher. I'd like to see him win another Cy Young Award this year."

Enzmann will have a chance to meet Rose and Carlton and see the Phillies play on May 1 when he helps the Phillies celebrate their 100th anniversary and receives the honor of throwing out the first ball.

Joe Oeschger (pronounced esh-ker) pitched for the Phillies in seven seasons and, at 91 years of age, holds the distinction of being the second oldest-living Phillies player.

Oeschger played 12 years in the major leagues compiling a record of 83-116 (30-48 with the Phils) and a 3.81 ERA.

He went directly from St. Mary's College to the Phillies in 1914 and a year later found himself on the Phillies first pennant-winning club. "The 1915 Phillies team was well balanced with good pitching, good hitting, good fielding and high morale," he noted.

That 1915 club had three Hall of Famers on the Pitching staff (Grover Alexander, Eppa Rixey and Chief Bender) which made it difficult for a young pitcher to get much work. "Grover Alexander was the most outstanding pitcher in the National League in that era," said Oeschger. "He had marvelous control and a variety of pitches."

Oeschger was in uniform for the 1915 World Series and warmed up a few times, but never got to pitch. However, he says that just being on a team participating in a World Series will always be a thrill.

Oeschger and his wife Nancy keep busy maintaining their rural home in Ferndale, Calif. and answering a steady flow of fan mail.

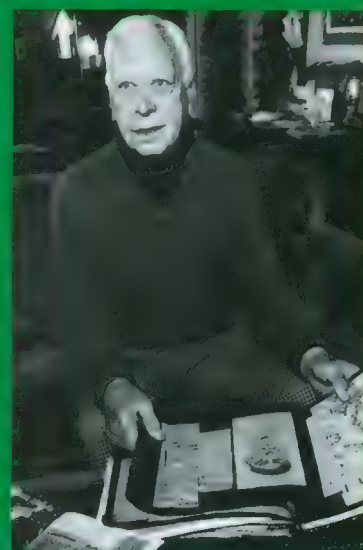

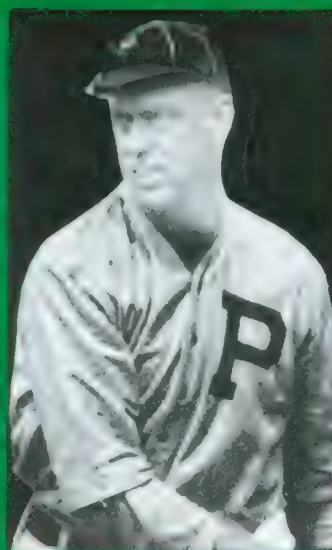

Fans still remember Oeschger as the man who pitched the longest game in history. On May 1, 1920, while playing for the Boston Braves, he pitched 26 innings but got no decision as the game was called because of darkness with the score tied at 1-1. Oeschger threw approximately 250 pitches in the three-hour and 50 minute marathon, giving up only nine hits and four walks.

Philadelphia holds a special place in Oeschger's heart. "I have a lot of fond memories of Philadelphia," he said. "It's a great city and the people were wonderful to me when I played there."

He is looking forward to returning to Philadelphia on July 15 when the Phillies will honor the 1915 pennant-winning club.

PHILLIES IN THE HALL OF FAME

Art Reprinted by Permission of Perez-Steele Galleries

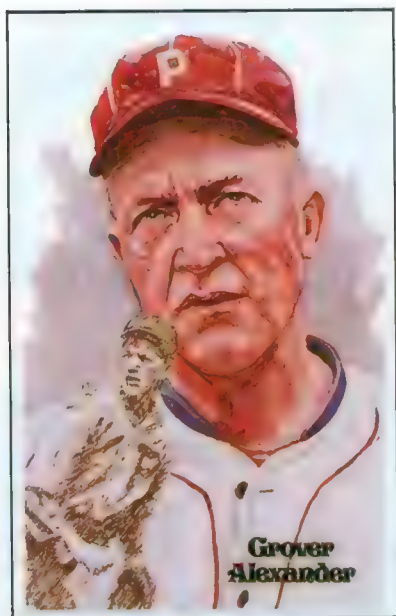

Although the Phillies may not have enjoyed many pennant-winning years, Philadelphia fans have enjoyed watching many great players throughout the Phillies history.

Since the first Hall of Fame election in 1936, 145 players have been inducted and 23 of them played with the Phillies. In addition, of the nine managers enshrined in the Cooperstown museum two of them piloted the Phillies.

Grover Cleveland Alexander became the first Phillies player to be elected to the Hall of Fame. His election came in 1938 and he was the ninth player in history to be so honored. Only Ty Cobb, Honus Wagner, Babe Ruth, Christy Mathewson, Walter Johnson, Nap Lajoie, Tris Speaker and Cy Young received the honor before "Alex the Great" did. Chuck Klein was the last Phillie to be inducted, having been selected by the Committee on Veterans in 1980.

The current Phillies team boasts five Hall of Fame candidates in Pete Rose, Steve Carlton, Mike Schmidt, Joe Morgan and Tony Perez. In fact, many items belonging to those five stars, such as uniforms, bats and gloves, are currently on display at the Hall of Fame.

Of the 25 Phillies enshrined in the Hall of Fame eight achieved their greatest fame while wearing a Phillies uniform:

GROVER ALEXANDER—Elected in 1938

Grover Cleveland Alexander was one of the greatest pitchers in baseball history compiling 373 wins, 90 shutouts and a 2.56 ERA in his 20-year career. Alexander pitched eight seasons with the Phillies, from 1911 to 1917, accumulating a record of 190-91 in that span. The righthander hurled a one-hitter on September 29, 1915 at Boston to clinch the Phillies' first pennant. Alexander's four one-hitters that season and his 16 shutouts the following year are both major league records. His amazing 1915 season when he posted a 31-10 record with a 1.22 ERA has never been challenged. Alexander led the league in victories, strikeouts and shutouts six times, ERA five times and innings pitched seven times. His 90 career shutouts rank second best all-time while his 373 wins rank third.

DAVE BANCROFT—Elected in 1971

Dave Bancroft, a switchhitting shortstop, began his 16-year major league career with the Phillies in 1915. In his rookie season, Bancroft helped the Phillies win their first pennant with stellar play at shortstop and went on to bat .294 in the World Series. He was consistently among the league leaders in chances, putouts and assists. Bancroft was traded in 1920 to the New York Giants where he blossomed as a hitter and led the Giants to three consecutive pennants. Bancroft also played for the Boston Braves and Brooklyn Dodgers before retiring in 1930 with a .279 career average.

ED DELAHANTY—Elected in 1945

Ed Delahanty is one of the greatest hitters in baseball history, batting .346 (fourth highest of all-time) over 16 major league seasons. In his 13 years with the Phillies (1888-89/1891-1901) he set records by going 6-for-6 in a game twice and by hitting four home runs in one game (all inside-the-park). The slugging outfielder batted .400 twice in his career (.400 in 1894 and .408 in 1899) and is the only player to win a batting title in both leagues. Delahanty was one of five brothers who played in the major leagues. He was traded to Washington in 1902 and died a year later in a tragic accident in which he fell off a bridge and drowned in the Niagara River.

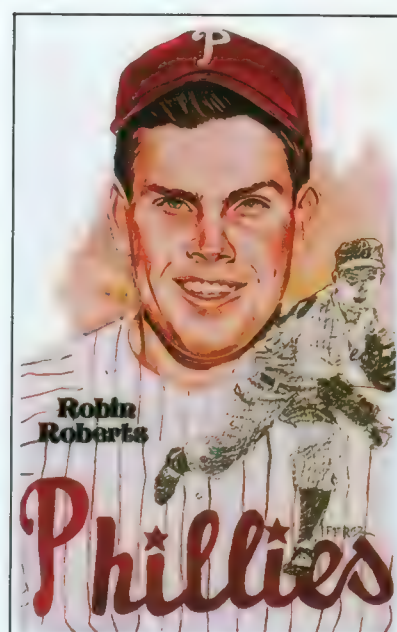

BILLY HAMILTON—Elected in 1961

Billy Hamilton compiled a .344 batting average (eighth best of all-time) during his 14-year career including 12 consecutive .300 seasons. In six years with the Phillies (1890-95) Hamilton batted .360 and averaged 87 stolen bases. The lefthanded-hitting outfielder stood only 5'6" tall, weighed 165 pounds and had tremendous speed. His 115 stolen bases in 1891 was a record which stood until 1974 when Lou Brock recorded 118 steals. Hamilton had 937 career stolen bases, led the league in walks five times and scored 100 runs in ten different seasons. "Sliding Billy" is the only player in history whose runs scored (1690) exceeded his games played (1578).

SAM THOMPSON—Elected in 1974

Sam Thompson was an excellent clutch hitter and one of the premier sluggers of his era. He hit 400 twice and compiled a lifetime average of .361 in 15 big league seasons. Thompson, a fine outfielder, batted over .300 in seven of the 10 seasons he spent with the Phillies (1889-98). He led the league in home runs and RBIs twice and amassed over 200 hits three times. Thompson led the league in home runs, triples and RBIs in 1895 while batting .394. He was considered the National League's leading home run hitter of the nineteenth century.

ROBIN ROBERTS—Elected in 1976

Robin Roberts is the greatest righthanded pitcher in Phillies history. He was the ace of the Phillies pitching staff for most of his career, winning 20 or more games for six straight seasons, starting in 1950. Roberts won more games (234) than any other Phillies pitcher in his 14 years with the club. He was the winning pitcher in the 1950 pennant clincher, working his fourth game in nine days. Roberts won 286 major league games during his 19-year career and was frequently among the league leaders in victories, innings pitched, complete games, shutouts and strikeouts. An excellent control pitcher, Roberts never walked more than 77 batters in a season. He holds the National League record for most opening day starts (13) and shares the All-Star game record for most starts with five.

CHUCK KLEIN—Elected in 1980

Chuck Klein was the first Phillies player to win the MVP Award, hitting .348 with 38 home runs and 137 RBI in 1932. Klein spent 15 seasons with the Phillies (1928-33 and 1936-44) and is one of three Phillies to hit four home runs in one game. He is the only Phillie to have ever won the Triple Crown, leading the league with a .368 average, 28 homers and 120 RBI in 1933. But his best season was 1930 with he hit .386 with 40 home runs and 170 RBI yet did not lead the league in any of the three categories. Klein ended his 17-year career in 1944 with a .320 batting average and 300 home runs. His 44 assists as an outfielder in 1930 is a major league record.

HARRY WRIGHT—Elected in 1953

Harry Wright ranks as one of baseball's best managers, compiling a record of 1042-848 in 18 years with the Cincinnati Red Stockings, Boston Red Stockings, Providence Grays and Phillies. Wright, referred to as the "Father of Professional Baseball", organized, managed and played center field for the famous Cincinnati team of 1869 which went undefeated in 69 games. Wright managed the Phillies to a record of 678-589 in 10 seasons (1884-93). Upon retiring after the 1893 season he served as the National League's first chief of umpires.

Who Was That Guy?

Phillies Players with the Shortest Careers

by Larry Shenk

Although it's impossible to come up with an exact count, there must have been a couple thousand players who have put on a Phillies uniform in the club's 100 years of existence.

Some hung around for a long time. They are the great ones. Their names are very familiar—Robin Roberts, Mike Schmidt, Grover Alexander, Richie Ashburn, Del Ennis.

Then there were the players who were big leaguers for short careers. Those names aren't as familiar... Barry Lersch, Joe Koppe, Ray Culp, Karl Drews, Roy Smalley.

Quite a few spent only one season or a portion of one season with the Phillies. You all recall the likes of Vic Roznovsky, Homer Peel, Lynn Lovenguth, Wally Westlake, Fred Wenz. It's a long list.

Some of that group were only around a very short time, time enough to get a cup of coffee as the saying goes.

Well, there were some Phillies whose careers were SO short, their cup of coffee was more like an eye drop's worth.

In digging through the Official Baseball Encyclopedia, I was able to come up with players who were in only one game... the "Unknowns."

Quite a few were in just that one contest, but I boiled it down much further. Hitters had to have one or fewer at bats and pitchers, one inning or less.

Greatest of the "Unknowns" are a pair of native Philadelphians, the late Clarence "Ty" Pickup and Bill Peterman.

Peterman still lives in the city (Olney section). He's 61 years old and semi-retired now.

Pickup and Peterman are the only players in Phillies history to have a perfect 1.000 batting average.

Pickup had a single in his only game back in 1918.

Peterman, a catcher, did the same in 1942.

"Sure, I remember it," recalls Peterman. "I got the hit off a pitcher named Ed Head of the Brooklyn Dodgers at Connie Mack Stadium. It went up the middle, kind of had eyes," he added with a big smile.

"It happened in the first two-three weeks, the last game of a home stand before the Phillies went on their first western trip. I got sent down before the trip."

Bill Peterman and Pat Corrales discuss Peterman's only at bat with the Phillies in 1942.

Peterman went to spring training with the Phillies again in 1946 but never returned to the majors. His professional career ended as a manager in the A's system in 1950.

A handful of players were in one game but didn't bat. One of those was Fred Van Dusen, a big bonus baby in the mid 1950s. He was one of the most sought after high school players and the Phillies thought they had a plum.

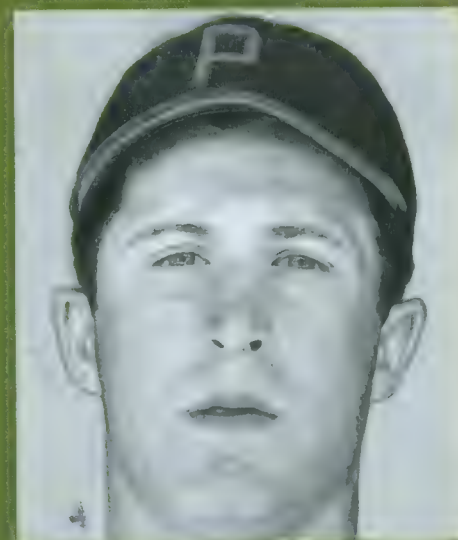

Well, his only claim to fame in the big leagues was pinch hitting for Lynn Lovenguth. It was in Milwaukee, Sept. 11th, the second game, in 1955. Van Dusen never got a change to join Pickup and Peterman. He was hit by a pitch from Humberto Robinson.

Van Dusen at least got to step in the batter's box. Mickey Harrington didn't.

Mickey was recalled by the Phillies on June 30, 1963. He was sent back down to the minors 15 days later.

His game in the big leagues came on July 10th.

"It was late in the game and I was sent in to pinch run for I believe Jim Lemon... no it was Roy Sievers," recalls Harrington. "I was a pretty good hitter in the minors and here I am in the big leagues being used to pinch run. Something went wrong, I over-ran third or something."

Bill Peterman as a Phillie

Apparently the problem started when he didn't go from first to third on the next hitter's (Don Hoak) single to right center. When Clay Dalrymple's grounder forced Hoak at second, Harrington was picked off third by the Giants shortstop after making a big turn.

Harrington, now 48, lives in Hattiesburg, Miss. and is doing very well. He's a member of the faculty of the University of Southern Mississippi. "I'm an instructor in the physical education department and also director of the equestrian center. And, I have a sporting goods business on the side." It's impossible to find a player with the shortest stay with the Phillies. Records aren't that readily available.

But, Leroy Reams, an outfielder, might hold that distinction. He's one of a group who appeared in one game and got one official at bat. He was recalled from the minors on May 5, 1969; struck out against Houston's Larry Dierker as a pinch hitter two days later and was gone on the 10th of the month.

Fred Van Dusen

So much for the hitters.

Art Gardiner and Marty Walker, both no longer living, are the greatest "Unknowns" among the pitchers.

Gardiner relieved in a 1923 game and faced two hitters, walking one and allowing a hit. He didn't give up a run, though.

Walker started the final game of the 1928 (Sept. 30 at Brooklyn). His earned run average is infinity because he faced five hitters (three walks and two hits) and was charged with four runs. After the fifth hitter, he was lifted and gone forever.

There were several pitchers who appeared in one game and worked one inning.

Only two of that group didn't give up a run. Al Verdel and Erskine Thomason.

Thomason had his inning on Sept. 18, 1974, a 5-2 loss vs. the Chicago Cubs. Now a roving minor league pitching coach for the Cubs, Thomason recalls his inning:

"Yes, very vividly," he responded quickly. "I struck out my first hitter, Steve Swisher, on a 3-2 pitch. I don't remember the next guy (Steve Stone) but I remember he grounded out (short-first) and then I got Rick Monday on a grounder to second.

"It's funny because this winter I went to the local library here (Spartanburg, S.C.) and got the Encyclopedia to see if I was in it. There's this big book with all the greats in it and my name is there.

"It was a thrill then and it's still a thrill."

Chances are Thomason's really unknown to many, including Steve Swisher. But, that doesn't matter. He got to wear a Phillies uniform.

The Phillies in 2083

A Look Ahead at the Phillies Bicentennial Season

By BILL CONLIN, Philadelphia Daily News

Illustrations by Vicki Maloney

They used to play baseball in a huge concrete saucer at the southern terminus of the long-departed Broad Street subway line. The heroes of those Phillies teams so faded by years of change were Hall of Famers Pete Rose, Mike Schmidt, Steve Carlton, Von Hayes and Juan Samuel. Although many records and artifacts of that dimly-remembered era were destroyed in the Poverty Revolution of 1992-3, enough remain for fans preparing to celebrate the team's 200th anniversary this season to appreciate how far the Global Pastime has progressed in the Modern Era.

It is difficult to conceive fans of that time burning precious fossil fuel, jamming the decaying highways and polluting the atmosphere, but they did. And nearly 3 million watched the 1983 Phillies celebrate the Centennial. Contrast that with attendance last season in the Carpenter Dome, which was just over 500,000.

Although use of home computers had become widespread toward the end of the last century—particularly in the Gray '90s—and video technology had achieved a certain sophistication, our forefathers were dealing with the mere tip of the iceberg, to use a quaint 20th Century expression. In retrospect, we of the Solar Age can forgive their mistakes, understand the nuclear accidents which turned Western Pennsylvania and most of Ohio into a Forbidden Zone. Those were ignorant times. Even the most erudite futurists of 1983 failed to predict the breakthrough by genetic engineers which doubled the Biblical three score years and ten. How would our ancestors, so steeped in the ethics of their Judao-Christian heritage, have reacted to the 42d Amendment to the Constitution, which in 2057 created the National Birth Lottery?

Thomas Malthus warned in the early 19th Century that the population would eventually outstrip the food supply and the amendment which limited child-bearing to one woman in 10 was the only way Congress could achieve today's minus population growth and a projected 2100 population of just 125 million.

According to surviving materials in the Compu-Library, the 1983 Phillies were criticized for their advancing age. One newspaper wag of the day christened them the "Wheeze Kids." The oldest player on that team of 100 years ago was Rose, who played at age 42 and beyond. The average age of Manager Microchip Jones' starting eight this season will be 64. Home run king Dickie Allen, great grandson of a Phillies slugger of the 1960s, will be entering his 45th big league season and experts predict he will eventually eclipse the career home run of record of Ching Pu, the legendary Peiking Proletarians star. In fact, Allen will be honored by the Prols when the Phillies blast off from Pine Barrens Regional Orbit-port for their upcoming road trip to Vancouver, Honolulu, Tokyo, Seoul, Peiking and Capetown.

If a 1983 Phillies fan had been permitted a glimpse of today's game, he would be more startled by its setting and global scope than by the few modest rules changes. The most radical, of course, was the addition of a fifth infielder in 2045. The rules change became necessary when the distance between the bases was increased to 95 feet after Nairobi Jets outfielder Kwando Bikili stole 345 bases in 2043. When 45 players hit over .400 the next season, the extra infielder was added during the Winter Meetings on Space Resort 7. Stationed behind second, the midstop has cut down the number of cheap hits through the much larger infield of the modern game.

Visitors to our century would find that baseball is still a game played with a round ball and a round bat. You still have to hit it square. But, the days of the replaceable bat are, of course, long gone. Allen has used the same 42-ounce Permabat for more than 20 seasons. Although the cost is high—an average of 1,500 petrounits per bat—their dense carbon, teflon and titanium construction makes them virtually indestructable. The Variable Flight Ball, customized for the aerodynamics of each ball park, was another useful innovation.

The major change, of course, is in the way the game is viewed by its billion fans. A visitor from 1983 would find that each of the 48 major league franchises plays its home games in domed stadiums limited to 10,000 seats. For lack of words our visitor would comprehend, these are essentially television studios and season-viewers are limited to five live dates per season on a lottery basis. The rest of the 184 game schedule is available through various subscription plans for Compu-Den viewing. Compu-Den, perfected more than 20 years ago by combining all existing microchip technology, features three-dimensional telescreen with 1,000 channel capability, total stereo and a communications center backed by a computer capability, total stereo and a communications center backed by a computer with 20,000 K memory. Unlike 1983, when people had to leave their homes for work, shopping and other daily chores, Compu-Den is the basic tool for more than 75 million home office workers. The almost total depletion of world petroleum sources made travel by private and conveyance almost obsolete, particularly when oil certificates replaced gold as legal currency in 2058.

Some things have remained the same, however. Clubs still conduct spring training in Sunbelt areas. The Phillies have trained for more than 50 years in the lovely Florida Gulf Coast resort of Orlando. Western Division clubs work out on the craggy but mild seacoasts of Arizona and Nevada.

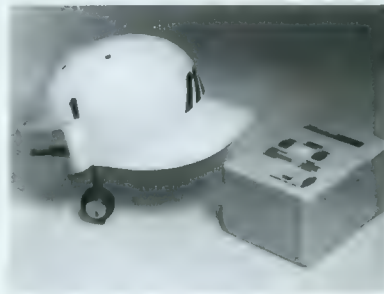

Was it some long forgotten French philosopher who wrote, "The more things change, the more they remain the same?"

When Eartha Washington, the nation's second black woman president, throws out the first ball to formally begin the Phillies 200th birthday party, fans will begin looking ahead to the events of the year 2183, just as they must have done in 1983, in a long-gone relic named Veterans Stadium.

The Future Is Now!

FUTUREQUIPMENT AVAILABLE IN OUR TIME

MIZUNO AUTOMATIC RADIO SYSTEM (MARS). Baseball will soon be taking on a space-age dimension as a result of new equipment just developed and patented by Mizuno Corporation of Osaka, Japan.

To help baseball managers convey signals instantly and with more accuracy than hand signs, Mizuno has introduced an audio-receiver system that provides direct communication with batters, base runners and coaches.

This new system transmits encoded messages instantly from a keyboard in the dugout to receivers built into batters' helmets using microwave. The message is changed into voice and amplified upon receipt by a speech-synthesizing device, thereby preventing other teams from jamming or decoding messages.

The Mizuno Automatic Radio System's transmitter and receiver are battery-operated, light and small. It can transmit up to 15 signals and can scramble signals if necessary.

MARS can also be adapted to other sports.

Stealing a catcher's signs may soon become a thing of the past with this new Mizuno Electronic Battery (MELBA). Shown here is a specially outfitted Mizuno catcher's glove equipped with an electronic relay device utilizing the latest in space-age technology.

Pressure-sensitive buttons enable the catcher to transmit the type of pitch and location desired through a lighted display panel on the pitcher's glove. Mizuno technicians have assigned special frequencies to each set of gloves to prevent other teams from stealing signs. Light combinations also can be changed to code the signal.

MELBA also has a built-in safety factor. Fewer signal mix-ups will save catchers much pain and broken fingers.

Who's The Greatest?

To Phillies fans back in the 1920s, Grover Cleveland Alexander was considered the Greatest Phillies Player ever.

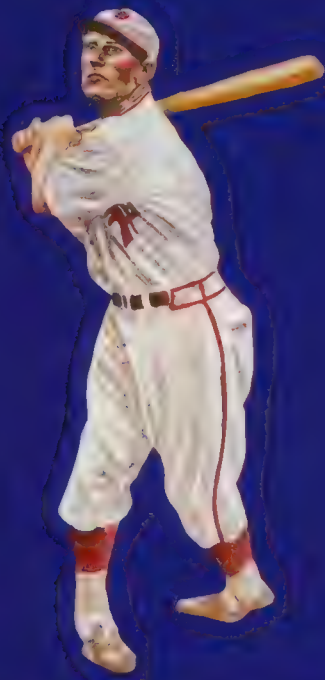

Sure, there was the outfield at the turn of the century of Ed Delahanty, Sam Thompson and Billy Hamilton. All of them eventually wound up in the Hall of Fame as did Alexander.

The team will be composed of a manager, catcher, first, second and third basemen, shortstop, three outfielders, righthanded and lefthanded starting pitchers plus right and lefty relievers.

Every ballot will contain the names of three players per position plus a write-in space for each. Nine outfielders will appear on the ballot.

But, the BIG NEWS is the selection of the Greatest Phillies Player. At the bottom of each ballot, there'll be a space in which the fans can write in their selections.

Today, the Phillies are led by more Hall of Famers... Mike Schmidt, Steve Carlton and Pete Rose, although Pete spent 16 years of his career with the Cincinnati Reds.

Arguments on who is the Greatest Phillies Player can go on and on.

Well, the fans will settle all of this in 1983.

As part of the season-long celebration of the 100th anniversary of the club, the fans will be voting for the Gillette Good News Centennial Phillies Team.

Thirteen members of the team will be selected to this team in fan voting from June 28 through August 1.

Then came the Chuck Klein era. If it hadn't been for Babe Ruth and the great Yankee teams, Klein would have gotten a lot more attention. His first five years in the majors were incomparable; .359 average, 232 doubles, 180 homers and 693 RBIs.

After Klein there was a draught until the 1950 Phillies won the National League pennant. Robin Roberts, a great righthanded pitcher and another Hall of Famer, centerfielder Richie Ashburn and slugger Del Ennis were the big names on the Phillies of the late 1940s and early 1950s.

That player and the living members of the Centennial Team will be honored on Friday night, August 26. Fans will receive a poster commemorating the team.

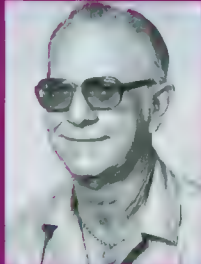

The Centennial Team will join other Phillies greats in an Old-Timers Game, Saturday night, August 27.

So, the arguments on who is the greatest will be settled by the fans.

Will it be Roberts, Alexander, Schmidt, Klein, Ashburn, Ennis, Carlton or someone else?

Choo-Choo Coleman, you are in big trouble!

Looking for that special outing for your club members, business associates, family or friends? Follow the lead of an old song and take yourself out to the ballgame. Bring your group to the ballpark and settle back for an evening of summertime fun. A Phillies ballgame is a ticket to big league excitement combined with first-class entertainment. And it's double the fun when you see the Phillies as a group. Stand up and cheer as Mike Schmidt sends another home run "outta here" and shake with laughter as the Phillie Phanatic captivates the crowd with his antics. Young and old, neighbors and co-workers will enjoy rooting the home team on. Join the summer line-up of groups who will be there for the fun of the 1983 Phillies baseball season. Terrace, loge, and reserved seats are available for groups of 25 or more for all Phillies games.

Payment should be sent at least 10 days prior to the game and your tickets will be mailed as soon as possible upon receipt of your payment. Payments received within 10 days of a game date may be subject to a seating location change.

PHILLIES PICNIC AREA

A picnic at the ballpark is back! Our recently refurbished picnic area reminiscent of a German beer garden is now located on the 200 level concourse in centerfield. Enjoy the convenience of picnic table dining only a short distance from your outfield 200 level box seats. Picnic before the game and then move out to specially reserved sections (267, 268, 269, 270) just above the outfield fence. Pack your own picnic delicacies or if you prefer, catering is available through Nilon Brothers at 755-9595. All the ingredients are there for a picnic perfect day at the ballgame. —Minimum 40—Maximum 180.

SUPER BOX AREAS

Grand Slam, Bullpen, Garden and Double Play Rooms are available for $11.00 per person excluding bar and dining. Contact the Group Sales Office at 463-5000 for more information.

Follow the Phillies on TV 29, WCAU Radio

WTAF-TV, Channel 29, is in the first year of a new 10-year contract to broadcast Phillies baseball.

WTAF will carry 78 games this season. Included in the coverage will be a pre-game show hosted by Don Henderson. Ray Tipton is the Executive Producer of Phillies baseball on WTAF.

WCAU radio is in the second year of an 11-year contract with the Phillies.

All regular season game plus post-season games will be on WCAU, 1210 on the dial.

Bill Campbell will host a pre-game and post-game show for each game.

And, 30 Phillies home games will be broadcast on Prism TV.
